LEAVING THE EU IS LOSING TOO MUCH!

The European Union is the most successful international project for preventing war by integrating the economies of independent countries. In 1957, after two world wars causing over 120 million casualties, mostly civilians, 6 countries - former enemies - proclaimed Never Again! They set up a new system of cooperation, allowing free movement of their people, goods, and services. Now the EU's 28 member-countries, by operating jointly-agreed rules, have become the world's biggest economy and largest trading block.

Britain's 45 years in the EU allowed us to remain prominent in the world after the loss of its empire. The UK is a player in all EU institutions, such as its Parliament, Commission, Court of Justice, Court of Auditors, and regulatory Agencies. In the EU, British governments, elected politicians, diplomats, and professional administrators have agreed a vast range of measures beneficial to all inhabitants. Participating in the EU's economy and legal system has led to improved rights for us as consumers, workers, women, parents, vulnerable minorities, and small business people. Together, member-states are involved in rescuing our damaged environments and preventing further deterioration.

Only by sharing our policies and scientific expertise in the EU can we find solutions to the ongoing economic, financial, security, and environmental challenges, including the human disasters of poverty and inequality.

Leaving Means Losing - Let's not be reckless!

We'd lose our place as a top international decision-maker.

Our freedoms, protections and rights would be weakened.

We'd be exposed to far greater economic competition.
